Note: There are several Womyss names which I cannot connect, among them Jean Womyss (p.12) who married James Macgill. There is more than a strong probability that she was the daughter of one of these whose line is noted here, but I cannot make the connection.

* Hugh the Great, E. of Vermandois - Hugh of Vermandois, son of Henry I of France, participated as a leader in the First Crusade 1096-1099. While to date I have not been able to ascertain the dates of this Hugh's birth and death, it is known that his father Henry I of France was born 1008, died 1060. As it was well known that Hugh of Vermandois was a brother of Philip I of France, it necessarily follows that the Hugh of Vermandois whose daughter Elizabeth married William de Warrenne, was either son or grandson of Henry I, probably a son, as determined by the known dates. * The Celtic Kings ruled under the system of "Tanistry" which prevailed nearly to the eleventh century. Under this system, the succession which was hereditary in a particular family, was determined by election among the members of that family. Usually preference was given to the oldest and the most worthy, but it was not necessarily so. Therefore, while the kingship remained in the family, it often changed from one branch to another, and did not necessarily descend from father to son.
